REDEEMING MUTILATED MONEY.

Some Difficult Tasks Come to the Experts in the Treasury Department.

Never despair is the principle which actuates the government experts who handle mutilated money. The regulations of the department require that before a mutilated bill can be redeemed, at least three-fifths of the bill shall be delivered to the Treasury. The expert has a piece of glass the size of the bill. This is divided into forty squares, and is laid over the bill to be redeemed. He recommends the bill for redemption if the remnants fill twenty-five squares.

Burned money, and bills that have been gnawed by mice, are the hardest to work on. The mice-chewed bills require great patience and care. Each of the pieces is carefully laid out on a flat, hard surface, and then with the assistance of strong glasses magnified so that it can be placed in a proper position with regard to the others. The experts have a copy of every bill that has ever been issued by the government. These are used as models as soon as enough of the bill has been laid out to establish the issue. No bill has ever been received at the Treasury Department in a condition which has made it impossible to straighten it out and establish its character beyond doubt. Nor have the experts ever been obliged to work on a bill longer than the eight hours of the working day.

Mrs. Brown, who is in charge of the experts who handle mutilated money, all of whom are women, had a troublesome task one day when a cigar box full of bills arrived from Philadelphia with the necessary affidavit showing that they had been taken from a poorly constructed safe, and had been burned to the condition in which they were found. The sender evidently believed that the original package ought not to be broken, and so he enclosed with the charred pieces some coins which also showed the marks of fire. During the passage through the mails the heavy silver was shaken through the charred bills until there was hardly a piece left big enough to cover more than the head of a pin.

Mrs. Brown did not despair, although she deplored the thoughtlessness that had allowed silver and charred bills to be packed together. She and two of her assistants set to work, and by the aid of magnifying glasses soon brought out four fifty-dollar bills, and within an hour recommended that they be redeemed by the Treasury.

Oddest of Partnerships.
One of the queerest partnerships in town is that between an Italian who operates a street piano and a little negro boy. The organ grinder and the monkey are a familiar sight, but people have grown tired of dropping pennies into Jocko's cap when their ears are tortured by hideous screeching tunes. But this latest combination is so unique that it never fails to attract a crowd.

The colored youth is a wonderful whistler. He puts two fingers in his mouth, and when he begins to try for crescendo effects the street piano drops back into place as far as noise is concerned. He keeps perfect time, and in addition to carrying the air interpolates such marvelous variations and trills that heads appear at the windows and a crowd gathers at every place where a recital is given. The boy's repertoire is the same as that of the street piano, and includes "The Holy City," "Oh, Promise Me," ragtime and a number of popular airs. After the boy thinks the crowd has had its money's worth he takes off his hat and goes the rounds. He never fails to extract double what the usual street piano man receives, and he says it pays him better than shining shoes or selling papers.

"I give half," he says, as he passes around his hat, and his audience evinces more willingness to contribute for this reason.—Washington Post.

We like to console ourselves with the delusion that the grapes just beyond our reach are sour.

Why Old Flats and Houses Don't Rent.
Real estate men and owners should not overlook the fact that the Lake View Gas Fixture Company, 238 Lincoln avenue, Telephone North 708, refinish old chandeliers, making them equal to new at very small cost. In many cases after expending money for calcimining or papering, the chandeliers are left in the same dirty, fly-specked condition as before, and are not in keeping with the new decorations, thereby spoiling that which has been done, when at a very small cost the chandeliers, brackets, etc., can be refinished equal to new. We refinish in all the latest colors, such as polished brass, gilt, rich gilt, old copper, polished copper, oxidized copper, silver and gold.

We are also makers of a fine line of gas fixtures at prices to suit the times. Call up North 708. Our agent will call and estimate.
